

THE HISTORY BEHIND THE FESTIVAL

Before the Modron War, the town of Alajast was saved by the heroic deeds of Calvin Enjary. Calvin was fishing at the mouth of the canal and had just hooked a large fish when he saw the approaching enemy. The white dragon, Gerrezmagol, was approaching with her hoard of kobolds.

Kalvin stashed his recently caught salmon into his gear and dove into the canal. He swam toward the city and had to dive deep to get under the gate that was still closed to keep the city safe at night. He got to the bell that sat outside the old church and rang it to alert Alajast of the approaching danger. It was then that he noticed that all of the Widow Longstreet's chickens were loose. He gathered the chickens to keep them out of the way during the soon-to-start battle.

With all of the chickens safely in their coup, it was then that Calvin noticed that his alarm had gone unheeded. The young man then raced through the streets calling out his warning. He found the town's sheriff and told him of the impending danger.

Kalvin then climbed the tower and looked out at the landing kobolds. He picked up three javelins and threw them. One of his javelins hit and killed the leader of the kobolds just as the creature stepped onto the shore. The son of the lord of the city joined Calvin on the tower, but the young man soon fell to an arrow. Calvin carried him down to the green where a makeshift hospital had been set up. Gerrezmagol landed nearby and Calvin grabbed the lord's son's sword and slew the dragon right where the gazebo stands today.
